I should not go. I want to be your all very much. I should only see you all and bid you good bye. I should feel better but I know I cannot. As I will have to say goodbye in this. I wish some of you could go down home and write home as soon as you get there. I hope I may see you all before many months. I hope, but may never again. You must all forgive my many faults and acts of unkindness, and remember me as your very deeply affected sister and aunt. O my dear father shall I ever see him again, I fear I shall not be alive! your friends at the East are all well.

Good bye my dear

Give your affectionate sister and aunt

The first of next week, I leave out from Apple Grove, to night come to Agnes, now. The lady Charles intends to go to B. next week if he is able. As he does, I think, he will be willing to take me.

I shall send Yehonid's letter to you in this. I think it is my duty die I wish could forgive myself

My dear Sister,

I now take the painful duty to inform you of the sickness of our dear Brother, Ebenezer. I find some to blame this wicked world & all its sorrows. My dear brother is sick with a cold for several weeks but our dear Sister is well. He sent for me two weeks ago to come and visit to live at a with a little paper he had written in a journal at that time. Last Monday he was not quite well. He worked out doors all day and at night he was at dinner on the other side. He took another bad cold which the Dr. says is in his right lung. This lung is badly affected. He took his last breath on Monday. Gordon came to see
